They kissed. Becker pulled Sarah close and put his arms around her. Sarah had closed her eyes and put both hands on the Captains chest.

He loved that woman, he knew because it felt so right holding her close... He had always told himself, that he wasn't made for love. He was a soldier and not some... well never mind. He had his thoughts on other things now.

It was just Sarah and him, sitting in the ARC's common room kissing.

The others had gone home hours ago, but Sarah had still been working, when he had made his final round around the ARC.

Well... working was the wrong expression... it was rather sleeping over her work than really working.

He had touched her shoulder to wake her. When she didn't wake he had softly called her name.

"Dr. Page!" he had been saying. She moaned and turned her head, but she didn't wake. He had smiled and again, this time a little louder called her name. "Dr. Page!"

She still wasn't moving.

"Sarah!"

She had lifted her head. "Yes?" she looked at him, puzzled.

"Oh, its you..."

He had smiled at her. "Yes, who were you expecting?"

She had blushed a little at that question.

"Eh ... my professor actually..."

He grinned. "So, you slept during you lessons? Now, that's interesting!"

"Got me into a lot of trouble..." then she had looked on the clock at the wall.

"Its really late..." she had sighed.

Somehow that sigh had sent a shiver trough his body. Not that it had felt bad... no ... not at all...

"Yeah... you should get some sleep" he suggested.

She had nodded at that, but hadn't left her chair.

"come on, I'll take you to your car!" he knew if he left her now, she wouldn't move an inch.

She had looked at him. "There's no need..."

He didn't let her finish her sentence.

"If I don't bring you ... you wont leave, right?" It wasn't a real question...

"You do know me, don't you..." she had grabbed some of her things and had packed them into her handbag.

Then they had left the office together.

Next thing he remembered was that he was kissing her in the ARC's common room, holding her close and feeling excited like a little school boy.
